

Our Creek in Winter

The beargrass is gone
The aspen has shed all summer memories
The creek dreams in narrow motion under a riven ice blanket

The air you raised your face into is not here
That water long since passed
What was is no more

Suppose nothing changed
Suppose we could hold onto a moment—
—a frangible thing cupped in our palms